Welcome!

Increased efficiency, productivity and professionalism start right here, right now.

With CenturyLink Business Voice Mail, staying connected couldn't be easier.

This user guide provides step-by-step instructions on how to use your Business Voice Mail features. Instructions are organized according to the telephone keypad buttons used to access them. Each set of instructions outlines the voice prompts that you will hear when you use the service.

To get started, just use the Retrieval Number shown on your welcome letter to call your voice mailbox. Or, you can use the Easy Retrieval feature (if your mailbox is built on your phone number, dial your own phone number and press 7 to interrupt your greeting). Then follow the voice prompts. Whenever you need help, instructions and hints are at your fingertips — just press 0 for help, or press  to back up to the previous menu.

This entire User Guide, along with instructions for the optional features listed below, can be found online at centurylink.com/userguides. It's a handy way to print out as many guides as you need, save the instructions onto your computer for reference and e-mail PDFs to others.

For questions about using your CenturyLink Business Voice Mail, please call 1 800-776-2777.

Mailbox Options: Standard Greetings / Group Lists — Main Menu Four

Business Voice Mail lets you customize each voice mailbox with a greeting that's appropriate for that mailbox. The Standard Greeting with Number reassures callers that they have dialed the correct number. The Standard Greeting with your Name is ideal for phones assigned to departments or information centers, as well as those assigned to individuals. The Personal Greeting lets you greet callers with a customized message. You can switch from one type of greeting to another quickly.

Save time by creating up to 15 Group Lists for various teams or departments. Once your lists are created, use the Send feature on pages 10 & 11 to record and send a single message to as many as 25 people simultaneously.

Optional Features

CenturyLink offers several optional Business Voice Mail features to customize your service for your unique business needs.

Call Routing — Your business can have one main business phone number for as many as nine different departments or affiliates. Callers will hear your greeting, and then be invited to leave a message in the appropriate mailbox. Call Routing does not ring through to individual phones; callers can only leave messages in each mailbox.

Call Routing To Number — This feature allows calls to be routed to other local phone numbers, to 800, 877 or 888 numbers, or to a CenturyLink Voice Mailbox. You can have up to nine destination numbers, as long as at least two of them are equipped with CenturyLink Business Voice Mail and billed to the same number as your service.

Extension Mailbox — Add up to three additional “extensions” to your main mailbox. It’s an ideal feature for small companies with just a few employees, or for businesses with multiple departments. Each extension can have its own security code to keep messages private, and mailbox “owners” can go directly to their own messages without sifting through everyone else’s.

Listen Only Mailbox — A Listen Only Mailbox lets you record an announcement for your callers to hear. It’s a great way to easily communicate information that does not require a reply, such as your company’s hours of operation, a list of the services you provide, directions on how to find you, or details on special offers and promotions.

Message Notification — Waiting for an important message or need to know the moment a new one has arrived? Message Notification will alert you on your pager or by ringing any local phone number you choose, including your work phone, home phone or wireless phone. You can use your Personal Greeting to tell callers that you’ll be notified when they leave a message.

Scheduled Greetings — The Scheduled Greetings option lets callers know immediately if they’ve called outside your regular business hours. If you choose this option, it will replace the Standard Greeting feature. Scheduled Greetings are helpful if your hours or availability change temporarily, for instance, during the holidays.
